◆About Omitted Tales

Originally, the Grimms' fairy tales was a collection of fairy tales compiled by the brothers Grimm, Jacob and Wilhelm. Beginning from the first volume published in 1812, the volumes piled up and the books also went through several editions with revisions. The brothers went about collecting the fairy tales through oral and literature research, and with each edition the tales were revised and updated, before settling into the form they are in today. Included within the stories were the so-called omitted tales, works that exist in an incomplete state. With the serial numbers, these seven stories are represented by KHM211 to KHM216. The Man from the Gallows is one of them. Generally the Grimm's fairy tales are represented by KHM1, The Frog Prince, to KHM200, The Golden Key, so altogether 200 stories. There are also the Religious Tales for Children from KHM201 to KHM200, the above-mentioned omitted tales, and then there are the 9 stories from KHM217 to KHM225, known as Tales from the Posthumous Papers of the Brothers Grimm.

◆Summary of The Man from the Gallows

The original title is 『Der Mann von Galgen.』

Late at night, a customer arrived at the old woman's place, but she didn't have any food left and thus was at a loss as to what dish she could make. She went to the gallows, where a single corpse was swinging, and cut out its liver. She roasted the liver over fire and served it to the customer, who wolfed the dish down. In the dead of night, someone knocked on the door of the old woman's house and so she opened it. In front of the door stood a corpse with no hair or eyes and with a wound in its stomach.

Old woman: "Where's your hair?"

Corpse: "They were blown away by the wind."

Old woman: "Where are your eyes?"

Corpse: "They were picked out by the crows."

Old woman: "Where's your liver?"

Corpse: "You ate it."
